ECON 262 Elasticity & Demand The concept of elasticity is widely used in economics. It is not a difficult concept to master once you understand what elasticity tells the economist about the demand for a good. The word elasticity basically means reactivity or sensitivity in daily language. In fact, when the economist wants to know how "elastic price" the application for apples $A(p)$, all that really wants to know is the application for apples "answers" to a change in the price of apples. The elasticity price of the application: concept: The application function can be written as $QXD = F(PX)$. This simply means that the requested quantity of good X (QXD) will depend on the price of good X (PX). The price of the price of the demand, therefore, it simply tells us "how much" the demand for good X depends on the price of good X. Algebraically: $Ed = \frac{\Delta QXD}{QXD} \cdot \frac{PX}{\Delta PX}$ where (Delta) means "change in". The biggest elasticity, more reactive or sensitive the demand for good x is of a change in its price. But travel !! Due to the law of the application, the elasticity of the prices of the demand coefficient will always be negative. When the price rises, the quantity requested should already and vice versa. However, it is always read as the absolute value - as a positive. Do not forget. Always lower the negative sign when you read the elasticity coefficient. Economists define the elasticity coefficient such that: if $Ed > 1$, then the question is elastic if $Ed = 1$, then the question is elastic units if and
