We: date of science of the first publication: 1871 pages rating Amazon - 3.9 / 5 Description The importance of the work of Charles Darwin for the development of anthropology is difficult to overestimate. Do not descend to the renowned formula: "The man came down from a monkey". The undoubted meaning of the work of Darwin is that it has generated the cell proof of the animal origin of man. Darwin is the author of the simial concept of anthropogenesis, which provides numerous evidence of the biological and behavioral similarities of modern humans and other primates. The scientist is far from the analysis of the mechanisms of anthropogenesis, rightly believing that the factors of human biological evolution, as a zoological species, are fundamentally as in other animals. Darwin pays tribute to the specific nature of the human biosociate nature, describing in detail the limitations in the functioning of the biological laws that are imposed by the social institutions that have developed and are developing in man's anthropogenesis. Darwin attacked some importance for the work factor in the anthropogenesis. Describing natural selection as one of the driving forces of human evolution, Darwin promotes its specific form of selection of the group, which has contributed to the development of social links in collective units.
