How do sound, Mise-en scene and performance create meaning in an extract from "The Notebook"(2004)?

Immediately mise en scene helps to provoke feeling from the audience via the colors that are used. Strong vibrant colours are used at the beginning of the scene to compliment the calm and happy atmosphere that is created. As the storm arrives the colours drastically change to dull washes of grey. This helps the audience understand how the characters are feeling as the storm symbolizes that they have to go home and represents that their happiness is fantasy at this point of the clip. This pathetic fallacy exaggerates how the characters are feeling and helps the audience understand this more clearly.

Mise en scene also creates meaning by the surroundings of the scene and the location of the characters. As the boat enters the lake it is surrounded by pure white ducks and tall thin trees. These trees act as a source of protection for the pair and allow the audience to feel relaxed as they rekindle their old feelings from the past. The idealistic location of the scene makes it look magical and surreal which also helps provoke the feelings of love and romance from the audience. Due to the surrealism, the narrative is opened to all possibilities and the scene becomes unpredictable and more exciting. However, the lake that the pair row in represents their "own little world" and allows them to feel safe and secure – a feeling that is past on to the audience and contrasts well to the unpredictability of the rest of the scene.

The sound used in this clip from "The Notebook" compliments how the mise en scene is used and therefore helps to exaggerate all the feelings and meaning that is created. The sound is mainly non-diegetic music and is added to help the audience feel on par with the characters and allows them to feel more involved with the scene.

At the beginning of the scene soft, calm music is playing as Allie and Noah row into the river. This piece of music is recognised as the theme tune for the notebook and is played several times throughout the scene and the film. The piece of music creates a relaxed atmosphere and symbolizes how the two characters feel at ease with themselves when they are together. Due to the meaning of the music, it is played every time the audience are supposed to feel this way and is used to focus the audience on the romance and peace of the scene. It helps the audience feel as though they understand the feelings of the characters, which then goes on to them feeling them too.

As the two begin to row back, it starts to pour down with rain. In the same way as before, the music continues to exaggerate the feelings of the characters, however in this part of the scene it has a much stronger effect. At first it creates a sad mood and implies to the audience that the scene may end badly. However soon after this, the music climaxes and the volume suddenly increases as they begin to laugh. This suggests several mixed emotions and adds depth and deeper meaning to the scene. In my opinion, this part of the scene is the single-handedly most important part as it represents Allie's and Noah's relationship as a whole. The sudden burst of laughter and dramatic change in sound show how freedom is finally felt by the characters and Background Overall, a SAR should completely convey what was unusual or irregular about the suspect and the noted activity. It is often difficult to recognize institution or industry terms others may not be familiar with due to their everyday use in your work life. Clear writing is central to ensuring important facts are not lost in translation. Transfer then to the body to answer the 5 Ws (and How). As you or your designated SAR filers write the narrative, the audience should be kept in mind. In addition, the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) utilizes BSA data in its analytical tools to provide law enforcement, regulatory agencies, and the financial services industry important information and guidance on broader regional and systemic threats and trends. The 5 Ws and (and How), a basic tenet of journalism, as well as a useful checklist, are helpful to consider while writing a SAR narrative. The SAR narrative section is fundamental for the reader to understand the nature and circumstance of the reported details. If there was continued activity or a pattern of behavior, state the span of time and when the activity first originated, when the activity was detected, and a description of the activity during the duration. Introduction A system providing for proper Suspicious Activity Report (SAR) completion and timely filing is an indicator of a strong Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) program that incorporates policies, procedures, and processes to properly monitor for suspicious activity. Begin with the introduction by stating the purpose in filing the SAR and providing a general description of the known or suspected violation. Additional Resources FFIEC BSA/AML Examination Manual Appendix L: SAR Quality Guidance FinCEN SAR FAQ March 2015 the FinCEN SAR Electronic Filing Requirements FinCEN SAR Stats Technical Bulletin October 2015 FinCEN SAR Narrative Spotlight July 2015 Describe how the suspect's transactions or pattern was completed. In addition to describing the suspects as outlined in Part I, describe any additional details not provided elsewhere in the SAR. Who conducted the activity? Just as important as the data input in Parts I-IV of the SAR is, so too is the written completion of Part V: Suspicious Activity Information— Narrative. Tips for Developing a SAR Narrative Best practice recommendations for writing a SAR narrative include knowing your audience, structuring a narrative in an easy-to-follow arrangement, and ensuring the five Ws (and How) are answered. The SAR narrative is not only essential to addressing the suspected activity for which the SAR is being filed, but is also useful in other ways. Clearly written narratives have helped identify mortgage fraud, identity theft, and terrorist financing schemes at the institution level, as well as reflect how pervasive illicit behavior has become industry-wide. SAR narratives are useful in describing information about specific activity for possible law enforcement investigation. Key word analyses of filed SAR narratives have allowed FinCEN to map trends within the industry, notably showing a recent trend in rewards-based crowdfunding associated with possible illicit financial activity over the past 24 months. The narrative section allows for 17,000 characters, along with the ability to attach a Microsoft Excel file with up to one megabyte of data, should your financial institution believe the Excel data would be useful. This is where persuasive language is useful. Describe the transactions, what instruments were involved, and the activities that raised suspicions. To ensure compliance, it is imperative that your institution submit to FinCEN SARs that are complete. To improve the SAR narrative writing process, your institution should place an emphasis on the "who, what, where, when, why, and how" to provide a thorough description of the activity and your financial institution's basis for filing. This provides assurance plain language is used to most effectively get across your intended meaning. The SAR narrative, if well written, may make the difference in whether or not the investigator comprehends the activity. End with the conclusion, which should summarize the report, and include planned or completed follow-up actions and names and contact information as applicable. Do not assume your reader will be familiar with your institution's internal terminology, acronyms, or processes. This seems commonsense but may be overlooked since too often industry writing lacks this structure. Here you should state the branch, department, and location(s) where the activity occurred and street address(es). Think about fleshing out the occupation information, the relation between the suspect and your institution, and how long that relationship has lasted. Examiner expectations are for the narrative to facilitate an understanding of the known or suspected violation of law or suspicious activity. Write as if you are looking to convince a skeptical audience (you are). Narratives for Continuing Activity SARs When completing the narrative section of a SAR filed for continuing activity, be sure to identify the date of any SAR previously filed on the subject and the purpose of that SAR. The SAR narrative should be able to explain the chronology and noted suspicious behavior without use of your institution's acronyms or terms. Instead there tends to be a focus on shorter forms or bullet points meant to draw the reader's attention to key terms or to facilitate discussion, rather than to present a chronological story. It is important that your institution have the policies, procedures, and processes in place to ensure SAR narratives consistently provide the necessary information. This is important to assist your reader in connecting the dots. Keeping these in mind when establishing or revising your institution's SAR processing procedures, providing a template to your designated SAR filer, or writing a SAR narrative yourself will go a long way toward ensuring your SAR narratives are easily understood. In addition, the regulatory expectation is that the description should include enough information to explain the suspicious activity. To further maximize this value, it is important for filers to clearly articulate narratives. Why is the activity suspicious? When did the activity occur? Law enforcement also looks for commonalities in SAR narratives, providing a cross-section for further focus. The narrative information then allows for efficient collation of more details of the activities in question than may otherwise be learned. Identify accounts and account types affected. Part of filing a completed SAR includes writing a sufficiently comprehensive narrative. A sufficiently written narrative should, therefore, be a focus of a BSA program's suspicious activity monitoring. A beginning, middle, and end should be utilized. How did the activity occur? To get around this, step back and focus on writing a SAR an average consumer could understand. In addition, it's required by law, making it vital that your financial institution make a good faith effort to comply. The basic writing structure taught in school is most appropriate to a SAR narrative. Consider whether a person reading the narrative would be able to clearly understand the activity involved. Where did the activity take place? What specifically led to the SAR? It is also an area often noted by many examiners and investigators as overlooked or rushed through by the filer. In this section of the SAR, your institution must be able to replicate in written form all critical data fields completed in Parts I, II, III, and IV of the SAR. Where continuing activity occurs, a SAR must be filed after a 90-day review. Describe why the activity is suspicious and any relevant information kept in your file documentation. The filing deadline is 120 days after the filing date of the previously related SAR, although the continuing activity SAR may be filed earlier than the deadline should your financial institution believe the activity warrants earlier review by law enforcement. If this was a one-time incident, identify the date of the occurrence. The narrative needs to address the 5 Ws (and How) to best allow the investigator to understand the situation. Conclusion SARs work to identify potential and actual illegal activity and provide law enforcement a means to detect and prevent criminal activity at the individual and systemic level.
