These are easy to install by connecting the antenna to a receiver and mounting the receiver near a window. A directional antenna points in one direction. It can be used when a final line connects the antenna to a cell tower. The prices are reasonable, and you can find an internal antenna with a 50-mile radius. External antenna External antennas are often used in remote locations to pick up signals with a higher flow rate. They are usually mounted on a roof to reduce the likelihood of signal obstruction due to trees and buildings. Since the installation involves climbing the roof, this type of antenna can be a little harder to install. An omnidirectional antenna receives signals in different directions, instead of one such as the directional antenna. Look for an 80-mile range for the areas with cell towers located farther away.
